Career Booster: Letters of Reference

Letters of Reference are an important component of the application. Most programs require 3-4 letters with specific requirements varying by specialty and program (confirm individual program requirements early in the application process).

- Select faculty who know you well and can write a strong letter
- Prioritize letters from faculty in your chosen specialty, particularly those who can speak to your clinical skills
- Provide supporting materials (CV, Personal Statement) and remind letter writers of specific interactions you shared with them (case or presentation)
- If you have not worked with the letter writer in a while, offer to shadow
- If you are planning to obtain a letter from a September rotation, discuss your intent with the faculty member at the beginning of the rotation
- Set a clear deadline (e.g., 9/1/2025) to ensure letters arrive on time
- Express gratitude, and update your writers on your progress/match
